

CANADA'S PREMIER NUCLEAR LABORATORIES

Providing Innovative Science and Technology

Wednesday, October 24, 2012

Presented by: Senior Engineering Executive (to be confirmed), Atomic Energy of Canada Limited (AECL)

For over 60 years, AECL's nuclear laboratories have been the centre of nuclear research and development technologies. Today, the Canadian government is conducting a review of AECL's nuclear laboratories as part of its ongoing restructuring of the Crown Corporation. This review is intended to ensure that AECL continues to provide value to Canadians through the alignment of activities with Government nuclear science and technology priorities and nuclear industry research and development needs.

In this talk, you will learn about the diverse technologies being developed and the engineering efforts to convert the science to practical applications that have benefited us all. The well illustrated presentation will cover the following:

- A brief background on AECL and examples of engineering achievements
- AECL's value proposition to Canada
- Nuclear Science and Technology priorities
- Program Focus
- Enabling Business Innovation and Technology Transfer

The talk is about the "new" AECL and how it contributes to Canada.
This presentation is geared to a general technical audience and is multidisciplinary in nature.
